English Language Learners (ELLs): Who are they?

- ELLs come from nearly every continent, and represent dozens if not hundreds of countries, including the United States.
- ELLs speak hundreds of languages, dialects and tongues
- ELLs are more likely to be native born than to be immigrants or refugees
- ELLs come from every socioeconomic class within American society
- ELLs who come from outside the US may have been receiving a formal education in their home country, or they may not have been
- ELLs may be literate in their home language, or they may not be
- ELLs may already know some English, or they may not.
- ELLs may be any age or grade level
- ELLs enroll throughout the school year and may begin at any proficiency level
- ELLs are not “less smart” than English-speaking students

Who are ELL students?

- ELL students do not belong to a homogenous group.
- They vary by factors beyond the shared feature of being in the process of learning English.
  - Age/grade
  - Level of literacy in English and their native language(s)

The ELL Identification Process

Students Identified as ELLs

- (1) the reasons for the identification of their child as limited English proficient and in need of placement in a language instruction educational program;
- (2) the child's level of English proficiency, how such level was assessed and the status of the child's academic achievement;
- (3) the method of instruction used in the program in which their child is, or will be, participating, and the methods of instruction used in other available programs, including how such programs differ in content, instruction goals and use of English and a native language in instruction;
- (4) how the program in which their child is, or will be, participating, will meet the educational strengths and needs of the child;
- (5) how such program will specifically help their child learn English and meet age-appropriate academic achievement standards for grade promotion and graduation;
- (6) the specific exit requirements for the program, the expected rate of transition from such program into classrooms that are not tailored for limited English proficient children and the expected rate of graduation from secondary school for the program if funds are used for children in secondary schools;
- (7) in the case of a child with a disability, how the program meets the objectives of the individualized education program of the child; and
- (8) information pertaining to the parental rights that includes written guidance –
  - (A) detailing –
    - (i) the right that parents have to have their child immediately removed from such program upon their request; and
    - ✦ (ii) the options that parents have to decline to enroll their child in such program or to choose another program or method of instruction, if available; and
  - (B) assisting parents in selecting among various programs and methods of instruction, if more than one program or method is offered by the eligible entity.

ELLs and the Law: Rights and Responsibilities

- Lau v. Nichols (1974) – school systems must provide assistance to help non-native English speakers attain proficiency. Failure to do so deprives them of a meaningful education and violates their civil rights.
- Equal Education Opportunities Act (1974) – discrimination in education of any kind or on any basis is prohibited; failure to help students overcome language barriers amounts to discrimination and is therefore also prohibited.
